

Humorous Artworks Ease Fairtigue at the 2014...

Israel Takes Larger Role in the Search for Nazi...

Yes, More Brooklyn Gallerists You Need to Know

artnet Asks: Matthew Higgs

Oscar McC... Cor

Must See Gallery Shows on the Upper East Side When Visiting ADAA

Eileen Kinsella, Friday, March 7, 2014

Sometimes it seems like Chelsea galleries get all the attention, deservedly, perhaps, but there are plenty more enticing shows on view on the Upper East Side. If you're planning a visit to the ADAA Art Show on Park Avenue and 67th Street this weekend—and especially if you rarely make it this far north on your gallery expeditions—make it a point to get to these nearby shows while you're in the neighborhood.

4. "Germaine Richier"

Dominique Lévy / Galerie Perrotin

909 Madison Avenue

This exhibition, jointly presented by Dominique Lévy and Galerie Perrotin marks the first American exhibition in 50 years devoted to the work of seminal Postwar French artist Germaine Richier. There are more than forty sculptures on view, ranging from early torsos and figures to the imaginative hybrid creatures (humans crossed with bats, toads, spiders, and vegetal organisms) that brought her well-deserved international recognition. The show includes a selection of photographs by her contemporary Brassai, who documented the "magical chaos" of her studio.

Sculptures by Germaine Richier in her Paris studio.
Photo: Brassai. Françoise Guiter Collection © Germaine Richier /
2014 Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York / ADAGP, Paris.